

Jonny Sonic releases SHIFT

Seattle, November, 2015 — After three albums delivering heavy, horn-driven, crowd-pleasing funk and soul to stages across the Pacific Northwest, Jonny Sonic and the Phenomenensemble release SHIFT, which demonstrates a new studio vibe for the band. With four stylistically differing takes on one beautiful break-up song, SHIFT foregoes the usual angst and heartache common in songs about broken relationships and instead explores a palette of varying complex emotions of separation. The lyrical perspective is a gracious voice that's more thankful for time well spent than spiteful about love gone wrong.

Digital Release: November 17, 2015 (iTunes, Spotify, AmazonMP3, Rhapsody, Rdio, Google Play)
Release Show: Seattle November 14, 2015 (Conor Byrne)

SHIFT

1. Midnight

Midnight changes to a new day immediately without hesitation.

Shifting from somber, reflective, and lacking to urgent and convincing, Midnight mixes minimalistic piano and flugelhorn in a haunting ballad for the wee hours.

2. Twilight

The second twilight transitions deep night into early morn in a swirled haze.

Shifting from confusing, wrenching, and unsettling to dreamy and fading, Twilight weaves electro-beats and percussive tweaks into a thoughtful dance track.

3. Dawn (featuring Kitty Camaro)

Dawn progressively awakens from darkness into realized light.

Shifting from a sense awakening, and immediacy to a hopeful, Zen-like, cooperative finale, Dawn boasts an eight-piece horn section and gender-swapped female lead.

4. Dusk

Dusk settles and calms stimulation.

Shifting from contemplative to acceptance and understanding, Dusk works as the sonic electro-acoustic coda to this exploration of loss, and remembrance.
